Existing or LIVING?

If you want advice on how to be healthy there are thousands of places giving advice; books, television, the internet, gurus, snake oil sales-people and miracle pills. However, if you want to learn how to be sick you are pretty much on your own. Chronic disease can be or will be a lifetime thing. If you have a chronic disease you need to learn how to be sick. After a while you learn that pain is more boring than anything else. Pain is predictable and you learn how to cope with it. Illness is a type of chaos, and most people don't know how to handle it. You get frustrated, then angry and try everything to get rid of it. No wheat, lots of wheat, no sugar, lots of sugar, fiber supplements, no fiber at all. You take herbs, bee pollen, and castor oil. You visit psychics, other doctors, the internet, recommend drugs from TV adds to your doctor, nothing works. You discuss your frustration with your doctor, your family, your support group, or anybody that will listen. Finally you get angry. You get nasty with the medical system, you crab at your spouse, your kids, even your friends. You get angry with your medications. You antagonize all the people around you that are trying to help you. Life is not fun. Most people eventually get to a point of acceptance, but this is existing not LIVING. So, what is the Answer? You have a choice: either you can be bad at trying to be the person you were before you got sick, or you could figure out who you are now and be good at that. A person needs to stop and look around. Find something you can be thankful of. Find activities that give you satisfaction. Let the unpleasant things assume a secondary place in you life, the doctors, the meds, the bumps in the road. Let them go. Let someone else worry about them. Do what you have to, but concentrate on doing positive things. Surround yourself with positive people. Look at nature; trees flowers, rivers, etc. Take a look at the people around you, see how your attitude affects them. Try a creative hobby, take joy in your yard, your house, the health that you have. Do something different, be nice to the people around you. Do something nice to yourself. Take in a movie, go to a concert, get a massage, take a trip. You might discover that the more attention you pay to other things, the more you might enjoy those things. Don't dwell on the fact that you can only walk 30 yards before you have to rest, be happy that you can walk those 30 yards. While you're resting look at your surroundings and enjoy the things you see. Make everything count. Concentrate on taking care of the people who have been taking care of you. Return the love that others have been giving you. Make no mistake, you are still sick, you still feel tired or ill, but you handle it in a different way, no anger, no frustration, just acceptance. Don't let the disease define your life, LIVE.

Pharmaceutical Care Clinic; College Of Pharmacy

The College of Pharmacy at UMD has two programs available for patients; the Pharmaceutical Care Clinic (PCC) and the Medication Therapy Management Program. In the PCC program patients meet with pharmaceutical students for the purpose of discussing your meds and supplements. The student will conduct a review of your meds and supplements. They perform a blood pressure test and pulse. Students will screen for drug interactions between those drugs and supplements and develop a pharmaceutical care plan which will be monitored by a supervising pharmacist. The Medication Therapy Management program (MTM) is offered at Es-sentia and St. Lukes. This program delves into the patient needs for coordinating disease and medications, and over the counter supplements. A medication program is developed based on the patient needs. The PCC program is at no cost to the patient, while there is a charge for the MTM program. For more information contact the University of Minnesota's Interprofessional Education Resource Center at 612-624-9151 for more information. For the MTM program call your local clinic or hospital.
